The Gladiolus

A delightful flower for the home garden. It grows from bulbs which increase in number from year to year. Plant them in shallow furrows any time in late April, May or June. Then keep the weeds down and the ground stirred occasionally. That is all there is to it except the cutting of the great spikes of wonderful lily-like blooms which last ten days to two weeks in water. Dig up the bulbs in late fall and carry them over winter like potatoes in your cellar. Gladioli are just the flower for the renter. One can always move bulbs. Remember we pay transportation on all stock you order.

FANCY MIXED. A really superb blend of the finer sorts showing almost every shade and marking to be found in Gladioli. Try a hundred of these, planting in four lots at intervals of two weeks. They will give a succession of flowers for cutting from late July until frost and you will find more bulbs than you planted when you come to dig in November.

Hardy Field-Grown Roses

Every gardener, no matter what may be his dominant theme, needs roses, few or many, to bring out its fullest beauty. The best are old-fashioned, heavy, full-blown, white, a few years old, and should not be compared with the little tender or year-produced roses. We are glad to show our present stock, at the lowest price, and guarantee our plants to live. Remember our prices do include delivery. We pay all shipping charges.

Our Wonderful Wait-A-Year Collection

It's a bargain offer all right, but it's that rare sort of bargain in which the quality of the stock is absolutely as good as the best. In fact it is part of our best. The catch comes in the size. The shrubs, trees, and vines in the collection are just one year younger than our regular grade. Sturdy, thrifty, and well-rooted, they really transplant better than those of larger growth. You have to wait a year for your full effect but you save more than 150%, by doing so.

For Only Four Dollars Cash

We will send the ten plants and trees listed above to you prepaid.

The same varieties, one year older, would cost you, at regular prices, $10.00. Order now and save the difference.
